

This volume focuses on the relationship between time, narrative and the fixed image. As such, it highlights renewed interest in the temporality of the fixed image, probably one of the most important trends in the formal and semiotic analysis of visual media in the past decade.

The various essays discuss paintings, the illustrated covers of books, comics or graphic novels, photo-stories, postcards, television and video art, as well as aesthetic practices that defy categorization such as Chris Marker's masterpiece La Jetée. The range of works and practices examined is reflected in the different theoretical approaches and methods used, with an emphasis on semiology and narratology, and, to a lesser extent, aesthetics and psychoanalysis. The interest of this book, however, does not stem exclusively from the range and scope of the artefacts examined, or the methodological issues that are addressed; its fundamental importance rests in the contributors' readiness to question the differentiation between fixed and moving images which all too often provides a convenient, if not altogether convincing, starting point for image analysis. The originality and value of the contribution that Time, Narrative and the Fixed Image/Temps, narration et image fixe makes to the body of theoretical writing on visual media lies in this challenging and comprehensive approach.

En couverture: Marie-Françoise Plissart, Aujourd'hui (extrait) © 1993 Marie-Françoise Plissart/Arboris, Zelhem. All rights reserved.

ISBN 90-420-1366-4

9 789042 013667

Contents/Table

Foreword
Jan Baetens & Mireille Ribière	7
Narration visuelle et interprétation
Jean-Marie Schaeffer	11
Narrative, time and the fixed image
Karen Parna	29
Fantasme et narration dans la carte postale photographique
Nicole Biagioli	35
L'image comme couverture et ouverture
Marc Lits	81
Clement Greenberg on narrative in painting
Lut Pil	91
Le roman-photo : un impossible renouveau ?
Benoît Peeters	105
Le réseau et le lieu : pour une analyse des procédures de tressage iconique dans la bande dessinée
Thierry Groensteen	117
Maus. A Survivor's Tale by Art Spiegelman – a second-hand narrative in comic-book form
Mireille Ribière	131
Énonciation narrative : image fixe et image animée
François Jost	145
Fixations sur l'image
Philippe Sohet	155
Trois métalepses
Jan Baetens	171

the requirements of "ISO Paper for documents -

emplit les prescriptions de Papier pour documents -

330 000

Identity and narration in Chris Marker's La Jetée Charlie Mansfield	179
Circling Greyhounds Carole Baker	185
Retour sur Muybridge : Lévrier faisant des tours de Carole Baker Jan Baetens	203
Bibliography/Bibliographie	213
Illustrations	225

Foreword

The essays given at the conference were organized by Mireille Lévesque. The relationship between the two highlights one of the main themes of the visual media.

Although the Image Studies have been given impetus, the field has been in a state of flux during the last decade. As a result of the ground in research, the field is less likely to be the result of a single picture or a single image, at the ground, a narrative of cultural largely in popular and on the one hand against the readily made.

The significance of the field is

179

185

203

213

225

Foreword

The essays in this volume have been selected largely from the papers given at two major international and complementary conferences. These were organised in London (March 1995) and Leuven (April 1999) by Mireille Ribière and Jan Baetens respectively, and focused on the relationship between time, narrative and the fixed image. As such, they highlight renewed interest in the temporality of the fixed image, probably one of the most important trends in the formal and semiotic analysis of visual media in the past decade.

Although the creation of the International Association of Word and Image Studies (IAWIS) gave the study of the fixed image a tremendous impetus, issues related to temporality and narrative received scant attention during the 1980s. The reasons for this neglect are complex and diverse. As narratology and discussions around temporality found fertile ground in cinematography, film studies took the lead in these areas and research by art historians lagged behind. Meanwhile, those issues were less likely to be raised in theoretical writings about photography as a result of the successful attempt to challenge the long-standing view that pictures are essentially at the service of anecdote. More generally speaking, at that time, issues of self-referentiality occupied the theoretical foreground, and the use of narrative in the visual arts – even the very idea of narrative – tended to be treated warily. Furthermore, despite the success of cultural studies as an academic discipline and the widespread, but largely ineffectual, rejection of the distinction between ‘high’ arts and popular arts, research into narrative on the one hand and the fixed image on the other was still suffering from seemingly irrepressible prejudice against the very genres in which narrative and the fixed image most readily meet, i.e. comics, photographic sequences and photo stories.

The reasons why temporality have now come to be regarded as a significant aspect of the fixed image are essentially threefold. First of all, the fixed image is no longer viewed in isolation since the complex interaction of visual and verbal messages in our modern multimedia environment – of which the Internet is but one component, – has led to the breaking down of artificial barriers between academic disciplines. Secondly, a large part of our visual heritage appears to invalidate the idea that temporal or narrative elements are only occasional or accidental features of images; following the rediscovery of the fascinating work carried out by Muybridge and Marey, for instance, photography can no longer be considered simply as a medium rooted in instantaneity and timelessness. Finally, those so-called ‘minor’ or popular genres in which narrative plays a key role, are increasingly regarded as legitimate fields of theoretical analysis.

In the present collection, the study of the relationship between time, narrative and the fixed image is not confined to any particular genre or medium. The essays discuss paintings (Jean-Marie Schaeffer, Karen Parna, Lut Pil), the illustrated covers of books (Marc Lits), comics or graphic novels (Thierry Groensteen, Mireille Ribière), photo-stories (Benoît Peeters), postcards (Nicole Biagioli), television (François Jost) and video art (Carol Baker, Jan Baetens), as well as aesthetic practices that defy categorization (Charlie Mansfield, Philippe Sohet, Jan Baetens). The range of works and practices examined is reflected in the different theoretical approaches and methods used, with an emphasis on semiology and narratology, and, to a lesser extent, aesthetics and psychoanalysis. But diversity does not mean heterogeneity: the essays included in this book often address common issues. Compared to other areas of research in the visual arts, the theoretical analysis of the still image has taken much longer to challenge the dominance of linguistic models. Without completely relinquishing these models, the papers presented here concentrate on the specific constraints and complexities of particular works or media, allowing distinctive theoretical arguments to emerge.

The value of this book however does not lie exclusively in the range and scope of the artefacts examined or in the methodological issues that are addressed. Its fundamental importance rests in the contributors’ readiness to question the differentiation between fixed and moving images, which all too often provides a convenient, if not altogether convincing, starting point for image analysis. Given that what is shown on the screen does not necessarily involve temporality or even narrative, the moving image shares many significant characteristics with the still

image. C
those ele
as a resu
viewing.
the realm
particular
Made up
sequential
sensibilit
story”. N
Sohet, J
masterpie

Final
various c
general a
the techn
framework
well as th

The origi
the Fixed
visual me

tion since the complex
our modern multimedia component, – has lead to n academic disciplines.
rs to invalidate the idea
occasional or accidental
of the fascinating work
ce, photography can no
ed in instantaneity and popular genres in which d as legitimate fields of

relationship between time,
any particular genre or Marie Schaeffer, Karen (Marc Lits), comics or Ribière), photo-stories
revision (François Jost)
ll as aesthetic practices
pe Sohet, Jan Baetens).
reflected in the different
with an emphasis on extent, aesthetics and
eterogeneity: the essays
ues. Compared to other al analysis of the still dominance of linguistic
se models, the papers
nts and complexities of neoretical arguments to lie exclusively in the methodological issues

sts in the contributors'
en fixed and moving
ient, if not altogether
en that what is shown
ality or even narrative, cteristics with the still

image. Conversely, the fixed image may be thoroughly imbued with those elements on several levels, with time featuring in the picture itself, as a result of various narrative strategies, and in the very process of viewing. In this context, objects and practices which belong neither to the realm of the still image nor to that of the moving image take on particular importance, hence the interest in Chris Marker's La Jetée. Made up almost entirely of images that are at the same time clearly sequential, but not moving, this film exemplifies the acute theoretical sensibility of its author, who gave it the paradoxical subtitle of "photo story". No less than three contributions (Charlie Mansfield, Philippe Sohet, Jan Baetens) scrutinize some of the major aspects of Marker's masterpiece.

Finally, since images cannot be viewed as isolated phenomena, the various contributions involve a wide-ranging discussion of the media in general and prevalent cultural practices. This involves the examination of the technologies used, of the images themselves and of the institutional frameworks that allow them to be distributed and circulated in society, as well as the multifarious ways in which they may be perceived.

The originality and value of the contribution that Time, Narrative and the Fixed Image seeks to make to the body of theoretical writing on visual media lies in this challenging, yet comprehensive approach.